- One of the ways institutions can internationalize their strategies is by receiving students from other institutions for periods of study, as outlined in the source provided.
- However, it is important to note that the acceptance of visiting students is at the discretion of the institution providing the learning experience, and any potential visiting student will be responsible for their own living expenses.
- Additionally, it is expected that the travel expenditure will be borne by the students and/or faculty members from the sending institution.
- Finally, the duration of the exchange program should be jointly decided by both institutions involved in the partnership.
- This exchange program model aims to provide an opportunity for students to study in a different academic and cultural environment, allowing for a more comprehensive education.
- Through this exchange program, students can benefit from exposure to different learning styles and teaching methods.
- Furthermore, this program can foster cross-cultural understanding and intercultural dialogue among students from different backgrounds.
- Overall, hosting students from other institutions is an effective tool for promoting internationalization in higher education and can have a positive impact on the academic and personal development.
- To further internationalize their strategies, institutions can employ various approaches, such as organizing symposia, conferences, short courses and meetings.
- These events can provide a platform for fostering academic collaboration, networking and sharing of ideas between academics and professionals from different parts of the world.
